FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Nov 30, 2009 – DAHLONEGA, GA -- Energetix, a leader in natural remedies, joins other supporters across the globe by purchasing and protecting lands that conserve rare or endangered species and ecosystems. Energetix has purchased over 65 acres of threatened tropical forest through the World Land Trust to help save this high-priority land from being lost forever.

The World Land Trust is an international conservation organization that takes direct action to save rainforest and other biologically important lands. Since its foundation in 1989, WLT has helped purchase and protect almost 1 million acres of tropical forests, coral reefs, coastal steppes and ancient woodlands. WLT includes local people and local partner organizations in every step of the process to create long-term sustainability for its projects.

According to U.N. agricultural official, Jan Heimo, "Damage to forest ecosystems is affecting everyone in the world through climate change, water scarcity and the loss of biological diversity." U.N. agencies have continually pointed to the essential role that forests play in the health of the planet.

Energetix is dedicated to improving the health of the planet and its inhabitants. They recognize that by saving the forests, they can help save the planet. Energetix understands that by doing their part, a real and lasting impact on conservation can be made, which affects the health and well-being of all living things. Supporting the WLT is a natural outgrowth of that commitment.

Energetix is headquartered on a lovely and natural fifty-acre estate in the North Georgia foothills. Product manufacturing occurs in several remote, yet pristine locations elsewhere in North America. From the selection of raw materials to intensive and age-old processing methods, Energetix demands purity and produces the finest, most potent BioEnergetic products available. Energetix recognizes that purity and potency are necessary, but not sufficient to create an effective remedy. The final step, that of creating intelligent, synergistically balanced and multi-faceted formulations, is the one that makes Energetix truly unique.
